Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 1400 on Saturday 17 Jul 2021

UK Outlook for Thursday 22 Jul 2021 to Saturday 31 Jul 2021:
High pressure will still be dominating much of the country to start this period, but will begin to drift away to east. An area of showers and thunderstorms already affecting the southwest, is then likely to spread erratically northeast across the country over the weekend. Still very warm, locally hot for many, and probably feeling increasingly humid. Conditions will continue to be cooler for some northern areas and windward coasts. Some low cloud, mist and sea fog can be expected for some of these areas, as well as for parts of the southwest into the weekend. For the rest of the period, spells of rain or showers are likely for many areas, with temperatures easing back closer to normal. Some heavy rain or thunderstorms is possible. Winds remain light.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.